

Transitory Contraction Operations - Remunerated Deposits Facility

Last modified Friday the 10th of January, 2020

Monetary contraction can be of two types: transitory or permanent. Transitory contraction is made through reverse repurchase agreements or remunerated deposits. These latter ones are not part of monetary reserves. The Central Bank makes permanent contraction by selling sovereign bonds in the secondary market.

File Format

Remunerated Deposits Facility

Exportable a varios formatos - IPC por ciudad por año
(Information available since April 2007)

Exportable a varios formatos - IPC por ciudad por año
(Information available since January 2000)

For a Given Date

Historical Data