The dynamics of the primary markets in which the financial system participates (e.g., credit, deposits, and fund management, among others) are intricately connected to the performance of the household sector, given its significant role in each of these areas. This report is created considering the above and the occurrence of episodes of high growth in credit directed to this segment of the economy, offering an analysis of the evolution of the main items of the household balance sheet on a regular basis and an assessment of its potential implications on the financial system. This Report uses information from National Financial Accounts discriminating by institutional sector generated from the collaborative work carried out since 2016 between DANE and Banco de la República (the Central Bank of Colombia), supported by the Economic Cooperation of the State Secretariat for Economic Affairs (SECO) financed by the Government of Switzerland and technical support by the International Monetary Fund (IMF). This source of information had an annual frequency between 2005 and 2016. From that date on, it is presented on a quarterly basis.
